Guangming ribao, launched on June 16, 1949 by the China Democratic League, originally represented the eight minority "democratic" parties in China. In 1957, the newspaper reported widely on the various forums critical of the Communist Party which followed Mao Zedong's call to "let one hundred flowers bloom". As a result, the paper was severely criticized in the Anti-Rightist Movement (1958) that followed. The paper then joined the mainstream of party publications.

Today, Guangming ribao is an influential daily, specifically in the fields of science and technology, education and culture, with readership amongst state agencies, universities and schools, the armed forces and in intellectual circles.

With correspondents resident in many countries worldwide, Guangming ribao also reports on international news from a Chinese perspective.
