Battle for Moscow, 1941-1942 Битва под Москвой, 1941-1942 гг.

This collection of hard-to-find studies covers the historic battle outside Moscow when the Nazi military machine suffered the first strong setback.

It is important to note that several items of this collection came out in 1943, right in the wake of this battle. The information included into the three-part study by the General Staff of the Red Army was highly classified and therefore this publication was addressed to top Soviet commanders only.

The same can be said about “The Rout of the German Troops Outside Moscow”, a book by Gen. Shilovsky, though while his other publication of 1944 with the same title was adapted for the mass readership.

It is useful to juxtapose these battle-hot materials with the solid academic study published years later, in 1958, and authored by the leading Soviet researcher Alexander Samsonov. The broad historical context of this grandiose battle as portrayed by Samsonov organically supplements the terse and laconic description represented by the military professionals, creating a comprehensive and multifaceted collection.
