Eurasia Journals Library (UDB-EJL) offers critical perspectives from within Russia and China during a pivotal decade of geopolitical transformation. In today's complex global landscape, understanding the authentic voice of Russian and Chinese media, policy discourse, and social science research is essential. This collection captures internal viewpoints on the annexation of Crimea, the ongoing Russia-Ukraine conflict, the Belt and Road Initiative's expansion, the COVID-19 pandemic, and shifting regional dynamics—illuminating policy frameworks and social developments within these two global powers.

Covering 2014 through 2024—and regularly updated with current-year issues—Eurasia Journals Library provides a modern archive of five prominent titles, all in English. Weekly digests (Current Digest of the Chinese Press; Current Digest of the Russian Press) deliver up-to-the-minute coverage, while flagship journals from Russia (Far Eastern Affairs; International Affairs; Social Sciences) offer rigorous research and authoritative insights.

In an era defined by rapid geopolitical shifts, researchers and students benefit from direct access to these primary sources: they can develop critical thinking skills, ground their analyses in firsthand perspectives, and inform coursework and research projects in international relations, political science, and area studies. By combining timely digests and major research journals, this collection reveals how Russian and Chinese institutions frame domestic narratives, shape external messaging, and navigate crises.
