LATE QING AND REPUBLICAN-ERA CHINESE NEWSPAPERS − AN OPEN ACCESS COLLECTION

The first half of the twentieth century began with the demise of China’s last imperial dynasty, the Great Qing, and ended with the foundation of the People’s Republic of China in October 1949. The press of more than twenty cities is represented, spanning the Chinese mainland and the entire half century. The collection provides researchers a richly comprehensive perspective on Chinese life, culture, and politics throughout the collapse of the Qing Dynasty, the years of provisional government and civil war, and the birth of the People’s Republic.

Open Access to this collection is made possible through the generous support of the Center for Research Libraries and its member institutions. Rumors, rumors...

Rumors are always a nuisance to everyone. Loose talk, never substantiated, has resulted in untold grief, in great tragedy and irreparable damages.

No one really loves rumors. But rumors are told and retold avidly and people spreading rumors do so sometimes with blithely without doubting the authenticity of the current stories.

Ever since the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, rumors were given out by responsible persons that sabotage by residents Japanese was largely responsible for the success of Japan’s initial attack.
From the 16th century onward, Great Britain established consulates wherever possible. In East and Southeast Asia, there were British officials in Beijing, Shanghai, Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan, Tokyo, and more, all in the effort to further trade relations. The by-product was a steady stream of written information and observations on the national heritage and political development of many countries, made at a local level. These reports were preserved, and are now online, as historically authentic documents in facsimile, as well as numerous maps. The material is particularly rich for the study of boundary formation, claims and disputes, allowing users to easily find unique insight in maps, government documents, and more.

Titles include the following sets from the CAE East & Southeast Asia Collection:

- China Political Reports 1911-1960: A collection of reports covering the rise of Communism in China and its effects over more than half a century.
- China Political Reports 1961-1970: This is the second part of an integrated series of political reports on China in the 20th century.
